Assessment Test

neo's Assessment Test is a variable-length computer-adaptive test that adjusts its degree of difficulty according to student responses, quickly placing test takers into the optimum neo course level. The test takes a maximum of 20 minutes to complete, and provides quick and reliable initial placement and progress results for school and university students as well as for company employees.

The Assessment Test scores are closely aligned with the CEFR (Common European Framework of Reference) and with other standardized tests, including TOEFL, IELTS, etc. The test is used by many companies' human resources departments to determine the English proficiency levels of the employees and of the applicants for new jobs.
